

Chamber Expo hears from Hull's new council leader as he looks to build pragmatic partnerships

Hull's new council leader has told an influential business audience how he is keen to build pragmatic partnerships – with an “alliance of the willing”.

Making clear he wanted to hear what all touched by the authority wanted from it, Cllr Mike Ross spoke at Hull and Humber Chamber of Commerce's Expo as part of Humber Business Week.

Addressing more than 100 business leaders, the man heading up the Liberal Democrats' first administration in the city in a decade, he said: “Being the leader of the council comes with a responsibility to make the city the best it can be, and to attract more people to come here.

Read more: Lagoon Hull zones in on a better understanding as public and business backing sought

“The role of leader comes with tremendous authority to make things happen, so I am keen to hear from people, to hear what they want to see happen in the city. Some will be small things, some will be massive things which will take more time, but I want to hear from people living here and making a living here.

“One of the key issues is what sort of council it is – I want to listen and am prepared to listen. I want to hear from people about what they want to see the council doing.”

Cllr Ross told how he has written to all council staff to see what changes they want to see to make improvements.

The lunch, jointly hosted by the Chamber of Commerce and HullBID, heard Cllr Ross put a focus on the city centre which he said had to be supported as it was the focal point of the Hull.

Cllr Mike Ross speaks at the Hull and Humber Chamber of Commerce Expo dinner.

“The Lib Dems want to support communities across the city,” he said. “It should be about place, and we want to create an environment where our places can thrive, not just survive.

“I want to be prioritising clean neighbourhoods where clean streets will encourage investment.

“Investing in infrastructure is important too – we all know about the road issues and we are keen to shift people away from cars and be greener, so we are starting a major listening exercise to see what the public wants, so we can get it right.”

Cllr Ross then turned to the cost of living and warned of tough times ahead. “The council will not stand back as the city suffers,” he said. “I do want to see the council do all it can to help the city thrive. I believe we can achieve more by working together, working in partnership, create an alliance of the willing to stand up for the city and work together.”

A question and answer session, hosted by Chamber president Mike Whitehead, saw several members of the audience calling for changes to the city’s bus lane rules, and a show of hands conclusively called for a return to peak time restrictions, rather than all day.

Other questions included the Albion Street development, innovation and balancing the books, the devolution debate, the skills agenda, digital exclusion and the proposed cruise terminal.

In response the question from the Chamber’s vice president and chair of the Shipping, Transport and Renewables Committee, Cllr Ross agreed he was in favour of the city having a cruise terminal and would like to bring more people in to visit the city, but he didn’t want it to detract from what was already here and he promised he would make sure it was done properly.

Originally from West Sussex, Cllr Ross studied politics at the University of Hull and has been a councillor in the city since 2002, where he has held key portfolios including education and housing.

Do you follow BusinessLive Humber on LinkedIn and Twitter?
Click to join the conversation.

Read More

Related Articles

▪

Council looks to buy Grimsby's Freshney Place Shopping

Centre

BusinessLive

Read More

Related Articles

▪

Humber feeling the benefit of offshore wind boom as

employment rises 16 per cent

BusinessLive