A manufacturer of security technology has relocated its European headquarters in the West Midlands.

Gallagher has moved to a new 16,145 sq ft office, warehouse and training facility at Tournament Fields in Warwick from its previous base in Nuneaton.

The New Zealand-based company, which makes products such as fencing, software and access systems, said the move came as a result of its increasing customer base across Europe and continued growth in the Northern Hemisphere.

Gallagher operates offices and warehouses in ten countries across the globe, employing more than 1,300 staff.

Richard Huison, regional general manager for UK and Europe, said: "We're so excited to officially be in our new building and we can't wait to welcome our partners and customers."

“We’ve grown at an impressive rate in recent years and fast outgrew our current premises.

“Our new building enables us to be better positioned from an operational perspective and provide a superior customer experience.”

Global general manager for security Mark Junge added: “It was necessary to increase our office, conference and warehouse facilities so that our team can continue to grow.

“This new building provides even greater scope to showcase our technology, host events and support our channel, consultant and customer network across the UK and Europe.

“With discussions well underway with several UK government agencies, and some significant recent successes with high security customers in the UK, this new facility provides the ideal base to support our continued investment in the development of solutions that support the UK and Europe.”
