

KPMG moving Nottingham office to the new University of Nottingham Castle Meadow campus

Top four accounting firm KPMG is relocating its Nottingham office to the University of Nottingham's new Castle Meadow Campus.

Around 200 staff are set to relocate next year from the business advisor's current office in Park Row.

KPMG said the move will provide it with a new home while strengthening its strategic links with the university. It will also bring it into a new professional working and learning environment which is being created to build closer ties between industry, staff and students.

And as well as allowing shared facilities it is hoped it will also supply a new pool of talent from the university.

Marc Abrams, senior office partner at KPMG UK in Nottingham, said: "This is an exciting time for KPMG in the East Midlands as we embark on the next stage of our relationship with the university.

"The decision to locate within the university in the city centre reinforces KPMG's investment in the East Midlands and our ambition to expand and enhance staff experience by providing new facilities.

"With this move our clients will benefit from greater collaboration on research and innovation projects between KPMG and the university, enabling us to deliver enhanced data driven outcomes for their businesses."

The university bought the Castle Meadow Campus last year after it was put up for sale for £36 million. It came on the market after previous tenant HMRC signed a 25-year lease on the 10 storey Unity Square hub, next to Nottingham railway station.

It has six distinctive three and four storey office blocks along with health and wellbeing hub.

University chief financial officer Margaret Monckton said: “We are delighted to welcome KPMG into our university community.

“Our Castle Meadow Campus will enhance opportunities for collaboration with local business, industry and small businesses, making it easier for partners to seamlessly engage with us and develop long-term, mutually beneficial relationships, and make a positive difference for the city, while offering the best of facilities for staff and students.

“KPMG is a foundational partner in this exciting new venture for the university.”

Justine Andrew, head of the university partnership office at KPMG UK, said: “Being located within the university’s campus will be a new step for us as we look to collaborate on talent, product development and innovation.

“We see the Nottingham partnership playing an increasingly important role in supporting new and innovative ways of working across the UK. The move is a hugely exciting chapter for us.”

Read More

Related Articles

▪

University of Nottingham acquires landmark HMRC site

which was on market for more than £36m

Read More

Related Articles

▪

Campaigners call for distinctive Nottingham office

campus to be listed