

Molly-Mae's business partner steps back from fake tan brand

A businessman who partnered with influencer Molly-Mae Hague to launch a fake tan brand has stepped down as the company's director.

George Gazzard no longer holds the position at Filter by Molly-Mae, which was established in 2019, according to a document filed with Companies House.

Mr Gazzard had been a director since November that year alongside the former Love Island star.

READ MORE: Click here to sign up to the BusinessLive North West newsletter

Filter by Molly-Mae is registered at Liverpool's Royal Liver Building while the influencer is now the company's sole director.

The move comes after the businessman's Catalyst Global, which he co-founded, entered liquidation in September.

Documents filed with Companies House show the company owed money to a number of celebrities when it collapsed.

They include former TOWIE star Mark Wright's fitness app Train Wright which was owed more than £20,000 as well as Keith Lemon's YMS Apparel which was owed over £2,400.

Catalyst Global had previously partnered with Tom Daley to launch his Made With Love knitwear brand.

Overall, 79 individuals and companies were owed more than £548,000 when Catalyst Global entered liquidation.

READ MORE:

- 'China's Rupert Murdoch' steps down as director of Manchester City parent company City Football Group
- 'Economic growth will be choked off': Bruntwood boss warns of impact of Avanti West Coast cancellations
- Sir Jim Ratcliffe: Who is the Ineos billionaire who wants to buy Manchester United?
- Boohoo defends warehouse working conditions after investigation
- Pets at Home's sales continue to rise but profits hit by freight and energy costs