

Fresh talks to be held in Royal Mail dispute

Fresh talks are to be held in a bid to resolve the long-running Royal Mail dispute.

Members of the Communication Workers Union (CWU) staged a series of strikes last year in a bitter row over jobs, pay and conditions.

A Royal Mail spokesperson said: “We welcome the CWU’s agreement to recommence facilitated talks through Acas.

The talks will commence on Monday January 9 and run through to Friday January 20

“Royal Mail is committed to reaching an agreement to resolve the current pay and change disputes to secure the company’s future and its employees’ long-term job security.

Read More

- Royal Mail honours Iron Maiden with new stamp collection
- Travellers primed for disruption as latest wave of strikes begins
- What are workers’ rights to strike? Industrial action law may be changed
- SPONSORED

Meet the Scot guiding people around the world’s great peaks

“The talks will commence on Monday January 9 and run through to Friday January 20.”