

Marks & Spencer warns of tougher trading ahead as half-year profits dive

High street giant Marks & Spencer warned of tougher trading ahead as it revealed that its half-year profits tumbled by nearly a quarter after soaring costs offset resilient sales growth.

The retailer reported a 23.7% fall in underlying pre-tax profits to £205.5 million in the six months to October 1 as it saw double-digit inflation in food costs, as well as more difficult trading in its Ocado retail joint venture.

Profits were also knocked by the cost of higher property taxes after the end of business rates relief, as well as its exit from Russia.

M&S said like-for-like sales jumped 13.7% across its resurgent clothing and home division as its bounce-back gathers pace, while comparable sales lifted 3% across its food business.

But underlying earnings in the food division slumped to £71.8 million from £124 million a year earlier as it said it chose not to pass it on an 11% costs increase in full to customers.

Read More

- Hundreds of jobs at risk as Made.com enters administration
- ‘Lonely Bounty’ returns for Celebrations Christmas ad slot
- Britannia ranked UK’s worst hotel chain for 10th consecutive year

- SPONSORED

Where to find festive fun in the heart of London this Christmas

The group warned of “more challenging” trading ahead in the cost crisis and said it is looking to make savings of around £150 million in 2023-24 to offset soaring inflation and help it weather the storm.

M&S said it expects to post full-year pre-tax profits “similar” to the guidance it set out previously, with most analysts expecting a fall in underlying profits to £397 million against £523 million in 2021-22.

This strips out the impact of business rates relief ending, Russia, and Ocado Retail, which is now expected to record a loss, according to M&S.

Chief executive Stuart Machin said: “Trading in the first half has been robust, with both businesses growing ahead of the market, reflecting the beginnings of a reshaped M&S.

“This progress means we face into the current market headwinds with an increased resilience and level of confidence.”

He added: “Looking beyond the current stormy weather, much is in our control and our mandate is clear – to step up the pace, accelerate change, drive a simpler, leaner business and invest in growth opportunities to build a reshaped M&S.”

The company said trading in the first four weeks of its second half was in line with its forecasts, with sales up 4.2% in clothing and home, 3% higher for food and 4.1% ahead in its international business.

M&S recently said it is speeding up a major shake-up of its stores estate, which will result in the closure of 67 larger shops as part of long-term plans to axe 110 stores under a sweepingoverhaul led by previous boss Steve Rowe.