Jenny Nangle, a Fire Safety Enforcement Officer for Lancashire Fire and Rescue Service has been named 'Bright Light' award winner in the Women in the Fire Service Awards 2022.

Jenny, who joined Lancashire Fire Service in 2003, was nominated in the national awards for remarkable contributions to the Fire Service.

The 'Bright Light Award' category recognises individuals who have led the way in their role in the fire service, acting as a shining example to others. This is through recruitment, retention or progression of women or enabling women to develop through access to opportunities and resources.

About Jenny

Jane Williams, Jenny's colleague and nominator, described her as passionate about Women in the Fire Service UK (WFS), supporting women in the fire service, and working hard to promote training and activities to develop women further and encourage them for promotion and other opportunities.

Jenny represents Lancashire Fire and Rescue Service on the WFS National Committee and is also the WFS North West Regional Rep. She also supports the planning of the annual WFS national event and helps facilitate workshops.

Jane stated how Jenny was always there to offer support, guidance or just a listening ear to any issues or frustrations and how she drives for better conditions and working practices on behalf of all women.

The award submission detailed how Jenny helped to promote the organisation Women in the Fire Service UK at every opportunity, and how she was quick to support others with challenges. As well as this, Jane said her passion and drive was infectious and her tenacity ensured that actions progressed to benefit women working in the Fire Service.

Justin Johnston, Chief Fire Officer at Lancashire Fire and Rescue Service said: "Jenny is truly deserving of this fantastic award, and I think it is very appropriate that she be awarded in this way. Her work in fire safety helps to make Lancashire a safer place for us all. I'm extremely proud to have learned that several Lancashire Fire and Rescue Service colleagues were nominated for awards, and I'm very pleased that Jenny has won. Jenny makes a very worthy candidate, and I think all the nominations are a great testament to the wonderful women we are lucky to have working in our organisation. Well done, Jenny!"

Speaking on the notification of her award, Jenny said: "Thank you so much for this award! I am really happy that my colleagues nominated me, and to be named the winner feels incredible. I've worked at Lancashire Fire and Rescue Service since 2003. In that time, I've had the pleasure of working with many brilliant teammates. Although we don't do this job for the awards, it really does feel great to have been recognised in this way. Thank you again."
