

End of an era for Ford, struggling air passenger numbers and commitment from big bank

Wilf Frost steps in for Ian King for today's business podcast, where he speaks to the boss of Heathrow Airport, which is still struggling post-pandemic.

He also sits down with the head of Bank of America, who tells him he's "committed" to the UK, despite recent political and economic turmoil.

And there's also news that the UK's most popular car is going to be axed.
