

FTSE 100 and pound dip as COVID fears overshadow England's lockdown easing

The FTSE 100 and the pound have fallen as the easing of lockdown restrictions in England failed to assuage growing fears about COVID case numbers and disruption.

London's leading share index was as much as 150 points, or 2%, lower in morning trading – taking it below the 7,000-mark – led by a 5% fall for British Airways owner International Airlines Group (IAG).

Companies from aircraft engine maker Rolls-Royce and Holiday Inn to Crowne Plaza owner Intercontinental Hotels Group and Whitbread, owner of Premier Inn, were also among the worst hit.

Image:

The FTSE 100 lost 100 points in early trading

There were no stocks in the risers' column as the FTSE joined in a global sell-off which saw similar declines on European bourses and followed falls overnight in Asia.

Meanwhile the pound dipped by more than half a cent against the US dollar to just over $1.37, its lowest level in three months.

Advertisement

Analysts have pointed to rising cases globally as well as increasing fears about growing inflation as being behind the latest cautious turn for investors.

More from Business

COVID-19: Iceland and Greene King latest to be hit by 'pingdemic' closures

COVID-19: What are the rules on wearing face masks in England from today?

China accused of 'systematic cyber sabotage' by UK and allies

COVID-19: Every rule that has changed as restrictions are eased in England – from nightclubs to isolation and working from home

Ian King Business Podcast: COVID restrictions

ease, oil production to rise, and how the pandemic hit the cruise sector

Carlos Ghosn escape: Special forces veteran and son jailed over car boss Japan flight

Richard Hunter, head of markets at Interactive Investor, said: "The general breadth of economic concerns has inevitably spread to the UK market, with the likes of the oil and mining sectors under pressure within the premier index on fears of slowing growth.

"At the same time, stocks caught in the reopening trade such as the travel sector continue to be volatile even after the easing of some international restrictions, as time begins to run down on a potential 2021 return to widespread tourism."

In the UK, hopes for another leap back to normality for the economy as social distancing and mask wearing rules are abolished have been undercut by a resurgence in cases and warnings to the public to remain cautious.

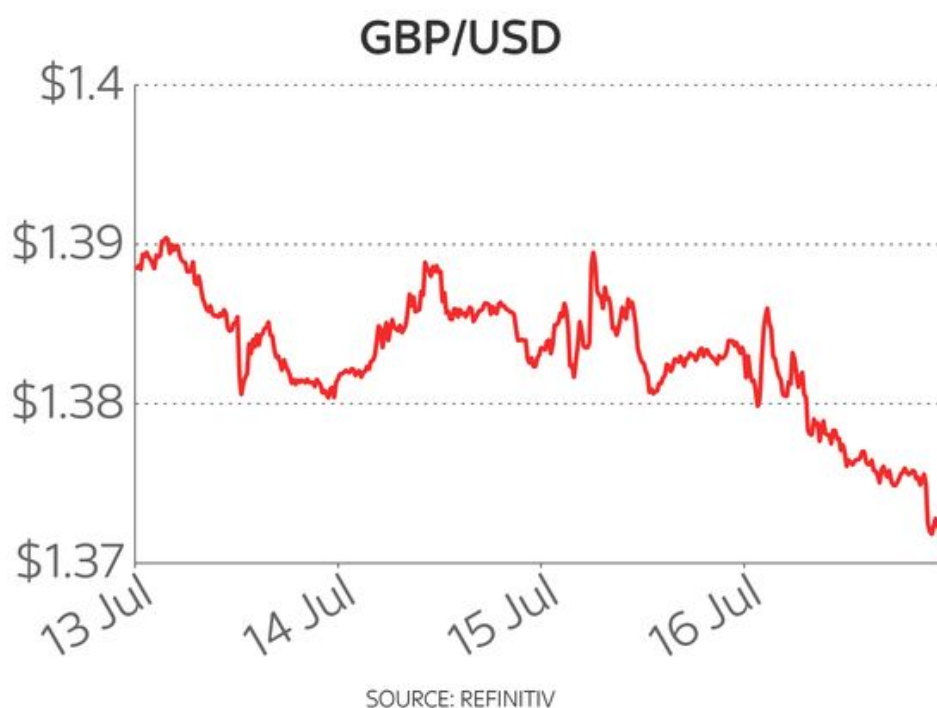

Image:

The pound fell to close to $1.37

Meanwhile, businesses are increasingly feeling the impact of large numbers of workers being absent because they are forced to self-isolate after being alerted by the COVID-19 app.

In the travel sector, fading hopes for holiday sales were dealt a further blow over the weekend as Britons returning from France were told they will still have to quarantine even if they are fully vaccinated.

Michael Hewson, market analyst at CMC Markets, said: "There was a great deal of optimism over the summer reopening, but as we look at how Delta variant infections are rising, some of that optimism is dissipating."

Britain's currency is in focus as investors watch for the outcome of restrictions being eased even as cases are soaring.

"The world will be watching the UK experiment with huge interest," Deutsche Bank strategist Jim Reid said in a note to clients.

"It could show a pathway back towards normality or it could be a warning to even heavily vaccinated countries that COVID will be a problem for a decent length of time still.”