

Labour 'will' spend £28bn on green pledges – shadow minister

Labour “will” spend £28bn a year on green plans in the next parliament if they enter government, according to a shadow minister.

The party has been mired in uncertainty over the commitment, with the Conservatives repeatedly attacking Labour – saying the current opposition’s plans would mean they would need to borrow extra money to meet the target.

Sir Chris Bryant, a shadow digital minister, was speaking to Sky News this morning.

Asked about the pledge, he said that “we are doing it” – adding that “it will be £28bn”.

Politics latest: 'We should all calm down' over King's cancer diagnosis

Politics Hub with Sophy Ridge

Sky News Monday to Thursday at 7pm.

Watch live on Sky channel 501, Freeview 233, Virgin 602, the Sky News website and app or YouTube.

Tap here for more

Last week, Labour's shadow chancellor Rachel Reeves would not confirm to Sky News political editor Beth Rigby if the policy remained in place.

The initial policy announcement was made in 2021 – but was watered down in 2023 to be a target to work towards, rather than a day-one commitment.

More on Conservatives

1922 Committee: Sir Graham Brady re-elected as chair despite plot to oust him by PM's supporters

For the next 100 days, Johnson's government will be on a war footing

Boris Johnson victory reaction: 'Excruciating and embarrassing'

Related Topics:

- Conservatives
- Labour

There were hints the policy could be scrapped last week, although Sir Keir Starmer appeared to recommit to it on Tuesday.

He said the investment was “desperately needed” to reach clean energy by 2030.

Advertisement

Sir Chris told Sky News: “It’s an important point.

“You’re asking me about what spending we will do in 2028, 2029, and our policy – and I’ve said it as clearly as I can – is that we intend to create Great British Energy.

“We intend to deal with the insulation problem affecting millions of homes in the country.

“We want to create the jobs that are essential, and we want to reduce our carbon footprint.

“We have priced that so far at £28bn and we intend to do it. Keir Starmer said so yesterday and that’s our intention.”

Read more:

Reeves won’t commit to £28bn pledge

Beth Rigby: Labour looking for ‘radicalism’ through reform

Please use Chrome browser for a more accessible video player

1:20

Reeves refuses to commit to green pledge

Advocates for the green policies are keen to keep the pledge, but some see it as a millstone around the party's neck which could be exploited by a Conservative Party trying to run an election campaign on an improving economy.

Speaking yesterday, the Conservatives' chief secretary to the Treasury Laura Trott said: "After weeks of chaos, Keir Starmer has said Labour are not 'scaling back' from their £28bn spending spree. This same old Labour approach of unfunded spending means higher taxes.

"He cannot say how he would fund his £28bn spending spree because he does not have a plan to pay for it and that means higher taxes for hard-working people and uncertainty for British business."

Sir Chris claimed there was a £20bn black hole in the Conservatives' financial plan for next year.

Be the first to get Breaking News

Install the Sky News app for free

sky

Spreaker

This content is provided by Spreaker, which may be using cookies and other technologies.

To show you this content, we need your permission to use cookies.

You can use the buttons below to amend your preferences to enable Spreaker cookies or to allow those cookies just once.

You can change your settings at any time via the Privacy Options.

Unfortunately we have been unable to verify if you have consented to Spreaker cookies.

To view this content you can use the button below to allow Spreaker cookies for this session only.

Enable Cookies

Allow Cookies Once

Follow Electoral Dysfunction on Apple Podcasts, Spotify, Spreaker or wherever you get your podcasts.

The Labour plans include setting up a company called “Great British Energy”, which would be a publicly owned clean energy body.

In her interview with Sky News, Ms Reeves spoke of “the Tory damage to our economy”, promising she would “never play fast and loose with the public finances” were she to take the keys to Number 11.